In this issue of The Gazette a highly interesting and instructive article on the early history of Galena is printed. Mrs. Florence G. Bale, historian of Priscilla Mullens Chapter of the D. A. R., secured the data and arranged the article in honor of the naming of this historic old town and it reflects credit to the members of the D. A. R., a patriotic organization that is setting high ideals to the younger generation. In these days of hurry and rush it is well to take time to honor the pioneers through whose efforts this great country stands today and bids fair to remain until time is no more.

Several Galenians will go to Dubuque this evening to hear "The Messiah" which will be sung at St. Luke's M. E. church in that city. Edwin Franzmeier, the violinist of Galena, will be one of the musicians to take part in this holiday event in Dubuque. The enterprise is on a large scale, for a city the size of Dubuque, and enlists the cooperation of the leading musicians of the city and surrounding territory, who contribute their services in chorus and orchestra. The crowds attending are always very large and handled by a large corps of ushers.

PRISCILLA MULLENS CHAPTER, D. A. R. CELEBRATES CENTENNIAL OF NAMING CITY OF "GALENA"

Honor Their Pioneer Ancestors by Recalling History of Their Lives in Galena, Jo Daviess County, Illinois

The members of Priscilla Mullens Chapter, D. A. R., commemorated the centennial mark of the naming of the picturesque and historic town in which they live by having a meeting devoted to the history of Galena and the important part their pioneer ancestors had in the development of the old town and Jo Daviess County, during the past hundred years. For without question, Galena was the center of the thrilling history of the early lead mines and the great Northwest.

For many years all the interest of adventure was in the development and the discovery of the Great Lakes and Rivers, the unbroken forests and the fertile prairie and hills that lay in the Valley of the Father of Waters. At this time, Fort Crawford (Prairie du Chien) at the mouth of the Wisconsin River was the center of the Mississippi Valley and of the fur trade, which was the most important industry in those early days. But the discovery of lead, the tales of wonderful shining mines in the depth of the earth in the "Lead Mine District" made a change in the tracks of the adventurer and fortune hunter, and all roads and trails led to the center of the mining activity "Galena", then called "La Pointe".

This "Pioneer" meeting was held at the home of Mrs. William G. Bale, Tuesday evening, December 14th, 1926. As no one now living in Galena could give the history from eye witness or experience, the form of recollection resolved itself into a recital of family history and tradition and the study of records kept of those early and virile days of long ago. Many interesting and important men and women whose names are a part of Galena's early times, are omitted in this sketch, as only the ancestors of the members of the Chapter, or their families, and their part in the development of county and town are used. Each member whose Galena ancestors were a part of its early life contributed to the interesting evening. They recounted tales told by their grandparents and parents, and one could easily see the thrilled children listening in the dusk of twilight to the wonderful story of Indians, motley gatherings of people from all over the world, hardships endured and fearful days and nights spent in dread of Indian attacks; for one historian writing in 1829 of the Lead Mine District says "Hostile tribes wandered over it at will casting an evil eye upon encroachments into their beautiful domain. In other words, Galena and the Lead "diggings" was an island of white miners and traders surrounded by two thousand Indians in their tepees and wigwams, who were in a sullen and resentful mood and were soon to show their teeth in the war Blackhawk eventually precipitated."

To prepare a setting for these family reminiscences, Florence Gratiot Bale gave an outline of Galena as it was one hundred years ago, and vividly told of the days of pioneer sacrifice, and the hardships of the settlers life, right here in the crooked streets and in the turreted rock ribbed hills of the most beautiful town in Northern Illinois—old Galena. She endeavored to produce the atmosphere of those long ago days and suggested that we forget the railroad, the telegraph, the automobile, the telephone, the airplane, the modern furnace or oil heater, gas, postal service and the marvel of radio and electricity and think in terms of ox teams, Red River carts, horse and carriage, letters sent by packet boats, six weeks to deliver to St. Louis, stage coach trips of weary length, flat boat and barges and canoes for river transportation, tallow dips, wood fires and one dress a year and Oh! horrors for the modern mind to grasp "woolen knit stockings"; a heavy red flannel petticoat, with hoods for winter and a "cap" if a woman was over thirty years of age.

But all stories of the life of this mining settlement were not of terror, for the settlers often went over many miles of hill and hollow to gay dances that began at sunset and ended with the dawn. Those early settlers of Galena belonged to a class of adventurous spirits that came to the lead mines with visions of big leads and vast fortunes awaiting them. Hospitality knew no bounds. Every newcomer was given the right hand of fellowship and social life was cordial; and untraveled with the conventions of the East and South, though many of the people were highly educated and from cultured families. The balls were attended by merry parties from all over the country and at Ford Crawford (Prairie du Chien) they often had guests at their gathering from Galena.

To be sure there were white men and a settlement in the region at a much earlier date and Julian Dubuque without doubt came up the River from his mining operations on the west side of the Mississippi and tapped the mines about this vicinity; For when the great and earlier "Klondike" rush came to the lead mines in 1821—22 they found crude implements for mining such as the men in Dubuque's mines had been using for several years. One Hundred Years ago on December 27th, the name Galena was officially given to the settlement. Previous to this, there had been several names used to designate the center of mining operations and trader's cabins, which early records mentioned as being situated in "La Riviere Feyer", or by some called the "Bean Reiver". It was two and half miles from the Great River that was the highway for the trader and explorer. In 1821, a trader and miner came from Kentucky named Thomas January. He occupied a high point of land lying between the Fever River and a creek known as "Meeker's Branch", this being in the vicinity of what is now called "Shot Tower" and it was so called from the tradition that shot was made there to be used during the Black Hawk War. This point was called "January's Point" and afterwards "Frederick's Point." Then when the French came to the mines in great numbers, they called it "La Pointe". In December, 1826, the people of the town realizing that their settlement was fast assuming a place of importance in Illinois, decided that it must have a more dignified and suitable name, so a meeting was called for the 27th day and was held in a tavern. Several names were suggested and they were voted on by ballot—"Galena", proposed by Richard Chandler, winning out by one vote. It certainly was a suitable name as it is the scientific term for sulphate of lead ore and its significance was very indicative of the wealth and treasure that was imbedded in the rocky hills, or was deeply massed under the ground and had to be mined with the crude implements used in the early days. After December 27th, all deeds, permits, mortgages and official letters were dated "Galena."

The first Post Office was opened in 1826 and it was the first one in Northern Illinois; Vandalia being the nearest. The first Post Office building was where Bench's Drug Store now stands, corner of Perry and Main. The important part of the town seems to have been in that locality, for the old Dowling House, once temporarily used for a Court House, is still standing back of the stores on Main street, and this is thought to be the first home built in 1819.

The great Water Highway, the Mississippi River, was only 2 1/2 miles from Galena and the Galena or Fever river at that time, was 350 feet wide and was broad and deep enough to carry the boats right to the levee of the settlement.

An old tavern, the Union Hotel, standing to-day, now the home of Mrs. R. J. Edwards, was built in 1839 of logs. John Farrant was connected with the tavern either as owner or tavern keeper. This property was purchased by Eunice L. Telford, December 9th, 1862 and conveyed by her heirs to Mrs. R. J. Edwards. The following is its "Card" in an old Galena Directory of 1855:—

1855 UNION HOTEL 1855
This house is situated immediately behind the Railway Depot and starting point for steamers to all parts of the Mississippi.
About four permanent boarders can be accommodated with a quiet and comfortable home commanding the finest view obtainable of the City and suburbs of Galena. New entries by flights of steps within fifty yards to its rear of the Railroad Depot. This being the site of the Axle Grease Factory of to-day.

Some of the original store houses and old rock dwellings are standing to-day as they were a hundred years ago, on lower Main Street and the old levee. As one looks at these old buildings on the levee, the thought comes; and the wish with it, that they could become animated and their walls give us a picture of the days of the past as they saw it in the early life of the quaint old town; as they saw it when the largest boat came up or down the Mississippi, also came up the Fever River to the landing in Galena. If such a panorama could be seen, the review would have many noted historic personages in it; for General LaFayette on his way to Fort Crawford from St. Louis, came to the landing but did not leave the boat. Jefferson Davis, Zachary Taylor, Charles Sumner, the great J. J. Hill of railroad fame, and Hamlin Garland (who came to Galena to consult Mr. A. M. Haines and get Grant data, before he wrote the life of General U. S. Grant) tells us that "There are men yet living who stood, one April Day in 1860, watching the steamer "Itasca" while she nosed her way up the tortuous current of the Galena River. As she swung up to the wharf, attention was attracted to a passenger on deck wearing a blue cape overcoat. As the boat struck the wharf this man rose and gathered a number of chairs together, evidently part of his household furniture. "Who is that?" asked one man of a friend. "That's Capt. Grant, Jesse Grant's oldest son. He was in the Mexican War. He's moving here," was the reply. "Capt. Grant took a couple of chairs in each hand and walked ashore with them. His wife, a small, alert woman, followed him with her little flock. The carrying of the chairs ashore signified that Ulysses Grant had become a resident of Galena." And real old timers have told us that a Prince of the House of Bourbon landed for a brief space of time on the frontage of the old levee, Fair Dolly Madison on her way to Fort Snelling with her dainty garb and slippers, left the boat long enough to dance at the "mansion" home of J. P. B. Gratiot out near the Fair Grounds.

And, quoting from the History of Illinois, edited by the late Judge William Spensley—it is more than probable that a person who was the cause of one of the most bitter judicial contests that ever took place before the Supreme Court of the United States, was within the borders of Jo Daviess County, I refer to Dred Scott. He was taken by his master by boat up the Mississippi River to Fort Snelling and returned the same way, and as nearly every boat that then navigated the Mississippi River stopped at Galena, it is fair to assume that the boat upon which Dred Scott was transported, called at that place, and it is more than probable that Dred Scott, for a brief time at least, was located in Galena. It will be remembered that the decision of the Supreme Court with reference to Dred Scott was bitterly assailed by Abraham Lincoln and ably defended by Stephen A. Douglas. That decision was more far-reaching and caused more discussion in its day than any other decision of that august tribunal. And Mrs. Alexander Hamilton, widow of General Hamilton came out West from the East, via St. Louis and the River, to visit at the home of the Gratiots and spent a winter in the West. A beautiful story is told of the tender care Father Gear of the Grace Church Parish gave to a sick and suffering miner. He was in such dreadful quarters at the Tavern that Father Gear took him into his own home and when all had been done for him that could be and life was fast ebbing, the man told his name and asked that his mother, Mrs. Alexander Hamilton be told of his death. When she came out to the mines later, she presented the Parish with a silver Communion Service, which is still used in the beautiful old church that is built on Prospect Hill. This church also has the distinction of having celebrated the centennial of its first service, August, 1926.

A chaplain of the Hudson Bay Company on his way East from Lord Selkirk's settlement at Fort Douglas, (up where Winnepeg now stands) was delayed in the mining town and held a service in a log tavern, opposite the DeSoto House site to which came people of all denominations. Later Capt. H. G. Hear, a prominent man in railroad circles held lay readings in his home and this developed into the century old Grace Parish of to-day, which was named after Grace Church of Providence, Rhode Island. It built its first frame chapel in 1838 and the sweet toned organ that is now in use in the present building, erected in 1848, is claimed to be one of the oldest organs in America and was brought from New York by the way of New Orleans, thence up the Mississippi and the Galena River to its present home. The interior of this beautiful old church has much delicate and graceful wood carving. The dark rich altar was carved by Guster of New York and is in memory of Dr. Edward D. Kittoe, who was a much beloved physician in Galena, and a surgeon on General U. S. Grant's staff during the Civil War. A stately eagle lectern of black walnut in memory of Dr. Kittoe's daughter, Maria Smith, is within the chancel and was carved by Mr. Gronner of Galena.

Galena, set on its seven times seven hills that are rock bound as the upheaval of nature left them, forms an unusual setting for the history of one hundred years, that has passed over its streets, its deserted mines and smelters, its narrowing river and its one time active and busy levee. Many stately old homes carry their years of usefulness with a dignity and air of past grandeur that recalls the days when Galena was the thriving city of thousands and little old Chicago was passed by, as the youth of the country came Westward to find a home and fortune in the great beckoning horizon of the West. History and historical spots are kept green by markers and tradition and at various parts of the town can be read such markers as "Site of the Old Post Office in 1840" and on the Court House of Jo Daviess County is a tablet telling the passersby that its date of erection was 1839. It was in this building at a town mass meeting called in April, 1861, that U. S. Grant, then a very quiet, unknown clerk in a leather store in Galena, offered his West Point military training to assist in drilling troops for service and a few days later he was busy at his job on the lawns of some of Galena's most aristocratic homes, one of which was the residence of Hon. E. B. Washburn, now the home of Mrs. Thos. Sheehan.

A statement was made by Thomas M. Roberts, a personal friend of General Grant that when U. S. Grant left Galena for Springfield, he went from his home on High street alone, walking to the Illinois Central depot with a little hand satchel, unnoticed and unannounced. It is almost beyond belief that in less than five years he returned to his former home, the hero of his country and the foremost military chieftain of the century, but to his fellow townsmen he was always "friend and citizen" and the statue of "Grant our Citizen" erected by the late Herman Kohlsat of Chicago and presented to Galena, shows him as he appeared in the daily life of Galena. The beautiful park that is the setting for this Grant Monument is one of the beauty spots of the town. The two Grant homes are also a part of the historic treasure that makes Galena a nation's shrine. On the high hill in the northwestern part of the city is the brick dwelling in which he lived with his young family before the war, and on the opposite hill across the River

WEDDED IN GRANT MEMORIAL HOME

Iowa Couple Add Touch of Romance to Their Marriage in Galena.

The first marriage in the history of Grant's Memorial Home occurred Monday in the celebrated edifice.

A young couple, Herbert Percy Haven and Miss Gladys Williams of Lime Springs, Iowa, expressed their wish to the minister they had asked to read the marriage ceremony, that they would like if possible to have the ceremony in Grant's Home.

Arrangements were quickly made, the privilege being granted by the Chairman of Directors.

The ceremony was celebrated at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Johnson of Galena, friends of the contracting parties, were the attendants.

The bridal party stood in front of Grant's chair in the Library, and here where the general had so often sat, and with numerous trophies and relics of war and pre-war days adorning the walls, in the atmosphere of a generation ago, Dr. Jerome R. McGlade of the South Presbyterian church pronounced the words which united the young people in the holy bond of matrimony, the ring ceremony of the Presbyterian church being used.

Later, seated about the historic dining table in the General's dining room, the legal papers were made out and signed by the bride and groom, the witnesses and the officiating clergyman and the Superintendent of the Home.

HOLIDAY CELEBRATING QUIET IN POLICE CIRCLES AND OTHERWISE

Everything quiet in police court today and yesterday which shows that the mode of celebrating the holidays is changing considerably from that which prevailed in years past. Even the number of tramps who usually occupy the city jail over night during the winter time has lessened the past week. They must have all gone home for the holidays or else are holding their mid-winter convention in some southern city. It's quiet around the Court House but business will pick up with the coming of the February term of Court. The hotels are practically deserted this week as the traveling salesmen are either taking a week's vacation or are working in the home offices checking up for the past year and planning the new year's crusade.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., YOUNG PEOPLE WEDDED

A happy marriage took place at the South Church manse Monday evening when Glen T. Long and Miss Marian L. Allen, both of Grand Rapids, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony.

The lines of the marriage ceremony were read by Dr. Jerome McGlade of the South Presbyterian church, the ring ceremony of the church being used.

The young couple left this morning by auto for Chicago on their way to Grand Rapids where Mr. Long is engaged in business.

CLARA OLSON'S FATHER DOUBTS ERDMAN OLSON'S GUILT

Chris Olson, of Prairie du Chien, Wis., father of Clara Olson who was foully murdered Sept. 10, has asked where he might secure an enlarged photograph of Erdman Olson, the accused murderer, to hang on his parlor wall beside a large picture of Clara.

Chris holds no animosity whatsoever towards Erdman Olson and made this statement: "I do not believe Erdman could have struck the blow. He was to have been my son and I can think of him only in that way."

This centers the crime on the unknown third party seen with Erdman at the dance the night of Sept. 9 at Seneca by Glenn Murray of Seneca. Murray had been asked by Erdman if he cared for a drink of something stronger than cider. He then accompanied Erdman and the stranger outside where they drank from a bottle of "moon".

District Attorney J. S. Earl does not accept the possibility of the stranger having committed the foul deed. He says he is firmly convinced by the evidence at hand that Erdman was the guilty party and to all intents the crime was premeditated.
